. An Aged Widow and Widower Figure in a Breach of Promise Case.

HER ATTORNEY GROWS POETIC.

Counsel for Convicted Murderer Dimey Moves for a New Trial.

OTHER COURT SUITS AND NON SUITS.

The suit of Mrs. Mary Shubkagel against Joseph Dierstein, for damages for breach of promise of marriage, was placed on trial yesterday before Judge Magee. Mrs. Shubkagel, the plaintiff, it is stated, is over 60 years of age and the mother of ten grown up children. Dierstein, the defendant, is her senior by several years. John S. Robb, Esq., represented Mrs. Shubkagel and Messrs. Whitesell & Son, defended Dierstein. The case was opened by Mr. Robb, who,

The case was opened by Mr. Robb, who, in his address to the jury, dwelt at length upon the blighted affections of the love-forn widow and held her bleeding heart up to the gaze of the awe-stricken jury, who listened intently so that they might hear the figurative drops of blood strike the plaintiff's stony heart with a dull thud. He said a breach of promise to marry was similar to the violation of any contract.

ONLY A LITTLE WORSE.

The plaintiff was the first witness called. She was unable to speak English and an interpreter was called. The defendant was scated behind his attorney, and while the victim of blighted affections was testifying he would with violent gestures express to the jury his approval or condemnation of the testimony given. When tender passages were reached he would, as a poet says, "blush so red as a handkerchief bandana and smile a ghastly smile." He thinks it's a joke, but she swears it is not.

Mrs. Shuhkaged displayed varied feelings while testifying. When questions she thought superflous or misleading were asked her, she would pour forth a torrent of German language that even the interpreter had hard work to that even the interpreter had hard work to keep up with. When she admitted that he actually hugged and kissed her, she tossed her head, smiled and blushed like any other giddy love-sick girl. SHE AGREED.

Her testimony was to the effect that she had know Shubkagel since 1871. They lived in the same house at No. 17 Spring Garden avenue, he having three rooms and she two. His wife he having three rooms and she two. His wife died in June, 1887, a few days after which he began to pay attentions to her. He only had to open the door of his room to go into hers and he was there every day and almost every hour. He hugged her and kissed her and when he said he would marry her and care for her she said all right. She admitted he had kissed her before he promised to marry her. Attorney Hobb interjected at this point and said, "He sealed the ulighted troth with a kiss." He looked real poetic when he said these words. oked real poetic when he said these words. About the middle of July, the testimony showed Dierstein berrowed $200 from Mrs. Shubkagel, Immediately afterward his dis-play of ardor ceased and be quit coming to see her, going back on his promise to marry.

At the conclusion of the plaintiff's testimony the court adjourned until this morning.

A Word About Catarrh.

"It is the mucous membrane, that wonderful sami-fluid envelope surrounding the delicate tissues of the air and food passages, that Ca-tarrh makes its stronghold. Once established, it eats into the very vitals, and renders life but a long-drawn breath of misery and disease, dulling the sense of hearing, trammelling the power of speech, destroying the faculty of smell, tainting the breath, and killing the re-fined pleasures of taste. Insidiously, by creepfined pleasures of taste. Insidiously, by creeping on from a simple cold in the head, it assaults the membranous lining and envelops the bones, eating through the delicate coats and causing inflammation, sloughing and death. Nothing short of total eradication will secure health to the patient, and all alleviatives are simply procrastinated sufferings, leading to a fatal termination. Sanvend's Radical Cure; by inhalation and by internal administration, has 'never failed; even when the disease has made frightful inroads on delicate constitutions, hearing, smell and taste have been recovered, and the disease thoroughly driven out."
